EDUCATION AS ACTIVISM

pocket guide

ACTIVISM IS EDUCATOIN AT ITS CORE / EDUCATION IS ACTIVISM AT ITS CORE

Inherently, by talking to someone about a social issue that bothers you, or spreading the word about an event/protest/counterprotest/benefit show or something else—you are an activist, and a teacher.

Teaching or spreading the word about history, ideas, potential solutions or alternatives to systems we have in place, and sharing all other forms of thought surrounding social issues is inherently activism.

WHO ARE YOU SPEAKING TO?

(TO CREATE CHANGE...)

AND WHAT SHOULD YOU BE SAYING?

Are you spreading the word about injustice? Are you stating an opinion on or proposing a solution to a local or national issue?

Know who you need to address in order to create change. If an individual (like a state representative) has the power to make a positive change, aim your message at them. If the power is placed on a larger body of people (in a town hall, a local election, a school board meeting, etc.), then mold your message to address and engage with that audience.

CLARITY AND IMPORTANCE OF YOUR MESSAGE

You cannot make someone's mind up for them, but you can ask them the right questions or provide them with the right information to change their awareness.

Do not attack, argue, or debate.

Instead: engage, question, provoke discussion and further inquiry, and inspire individual research.

Speak or write clearly, back up your beliefs with examples, situations, or sources.
